Ict deferment letter template

One letter that most Singaporean men fear receiving (or happily receiving) will surely be the SAF100, which is a letter served by the government to inform national soldiers to report on in-Camp Training (ICT). This letter means that participation in reservist training is mandatory for those who receive it, and if someone chooses to ignore it, they may be liable for the penalty. However, there are several ways to avoid reporting for training if one falls into one of the categories listed below: Exams/Internship For those who lead a degree at local private universities, you will surely be afraid to terminate reservist training because it means they have to postpone time from their busy schedules to participate in reservist training. However, if the examination period or traineeship for those studying coincides with the SAF100, they may apply for an NS deferral for their ICT. As long as the relevant supporting documents, such as their exam schedule or a letter from the company that someone is doing their internship are delivered, it will usually be fine. Your wife is born soon for those NSMen who are married if their spouses are pregnant and their expected delivery date is 4 weeks during or before their ICT, this may affect their ICT because they would like to be present when their spouses give birth to their child. For those NSMen with pregnant spouses, they can put ns deferre the request to defer their ICT by writing to their reservist units for deferral. If you have just started a new job within 6 months for those NSMen who have recently found a job within 6 months of receiving their reservist call letters, they can appeal and request a deferral from ICT so as not to affect their work schedules. If you are on long-term MC If NSMen has a medical condition that forces him to take medical leave for more than 6 months, they will be referred for medical review and during that period, any reservist training that falls during the period during which you are on medical leave will be postponed pending a medical review by the Army Medical Council. Compassionate grounds Any NSMen who unfortunately encounter situations such as the death of a family member or serious illness may request the postponement of their ICT and the approval of this ns deferral request is usually based on the discretion of their individual reservists units. My training was planned according to an operational plan that has already been established and as such a 1-week ICT will disrupt the operational plan established by my employer. This is not my wish to postpone my ICT, but I have to postpone it because of my basic employment with this potential employer. I have also resigned from my previous resignation because of this new employment opportunity and, for example, that I am at risk of unemployment if I do not receive a deferral. Personally, I do not want to spoil the working relationship with my new employer. Maybe I could discuss with my new employer what earliest possible date I could attend ICT. that due to supervision, I did not stress to my new employer in relation to this upcoming 26 July 2010 ICT. I hope that all the various factors will be taken into account and put aside for me to be granted. Thank you for your time. Is there a method for some fire to defer ICT? It was suggested to me that I call an MP to write a letter to Mindef to help defer my ICT. I deferred twice and failed and only got it approved after I spoke to my CO on the phone directly. May 24, 10, 10:05 #7 You've had a 6-month ICT notification, so you don't really have much choice other than telling you that your CO will only be 1 month into your new job. Otherwise, show the employer the registration file instead. If they want to fire you because of ICT, the company will get its ass torn. May 24, 10, 10:48 PM #8 I think the 2nd appeal will still be not something my friend's unit tried b4 when it is 1 month into his new job. The next step is to see the employer as, if worst of all, I'll go to an MP to call an MP to write an appellate letter to show the employer I've made an upward effort to defer my ict.
